FORESTRY NOTES

By
DAN BAGGETTE, FORESTER
International Paper Co.

Many questions have been asked concerning the sudden outbreak of the Southern Pine Beetle in the Southwest part of Mississippi. Many timber owners are concerned about the possibilities of an epidemic on the Gulf Coast, and rightly they should be concerned, because the Southern Pine Beetle is one of the deadliest of beetles that attacks our southern pines.

At present, no occurrences of the beetle have been reported in Hancock County. There are several factors which are detrimental to the beetle outbreaks which we have on the Coast. One is the humid weather conditions. It is understood that the beetles thrive best on areas of less rainfall and dry conditions. The contributing factor here is that pine trees grown under more humid conditions are likely to be more vigorous trees and, therefore, less susceptible to attack. Another factor is the species of pine involved. Although the beetles will attack all species of southern pine when an epidemic occurs, weaker trees on poorer sites of Loblolly and shortleaf seem to be more susceptible. Another factor, and maybe the key to the sudden outbreaks in Southwest Mississippi, is the weakened condition left from the heavy ice damage in that section during the winter of 1951.

There is some infestation in Hancock and Pearl River counties of the Pine Colaspis Beetle, but these outbreaks are not associated with the Southern Pine Beetle. The Pine Colaspis Beetle is a small brown beetle about one-eighth inch in length, and feeds on the young needles or spring growth. It gives a browning effect to the foliage several days after attack, but no deaths will occur to the trees except under extreme conditions. True, it retards growth, but several months after attack the browning effect is negligible.

This attack is quite a contrast to the Southern Pine Beetle, in regards to the manner of attacks and damage done. The Southern Pine Beetle attacks the trunk of the tree and burrows into the sap or cambium and produces a girdling effect. This cuts off the passage of water and food materials in the tree and is therefore sure death after attack.

Anyone noting any unusual circumstances where trees are dying should investigate and contact Pack Stewart, Ranger, Mississippi Forest Service.

MARINES & REDHEADS

JACKSON, MISS.—Marine Master Sergeant B. G. Mitchell (1st Sgt.) and Technical Sergeant B. M. Rosoff (Public Information NCO) of the Marine Recruiting Service in Mississippi were browsing over the enlistment records of the Women Marines when they came up with a startling fact.

Now the question is, "Do redheads like Marines?"

A new 3-room building at Mississippi State College for Women will be named in honor of retiring president B. E. Parkinston. Dr. E. R. ANNUAL COLLEGE LIBRARY REPORT

The college library, during the past year, has added many sets of periodicals, expanded its microfilm program, completed a card catalog for its collections of phonograph records, and cataloged graduate theses, and has made progress on several other projects, according to Donald E. Thompson, director of libraries, in his annual report to President Fred T. Mitchell.

FINANCIAL PLIGHT OF CITIES WORSE; CAMPBELL ELECTED

The financial plight of Mississippi towns and cities is growing progressively worse, retiring President Thompson McCollan of West Point, told the 1952 annual convention of the Mississippi Municipal Association in Ellenton.

Speakers at the largely-attended convention cited figures showing that federal taxes have soared 400 per cent in recent years, state levies are up 200 per cent and yet municipal taxes have increased an average of only three per cent.

United Gas Invests In Leadership Development

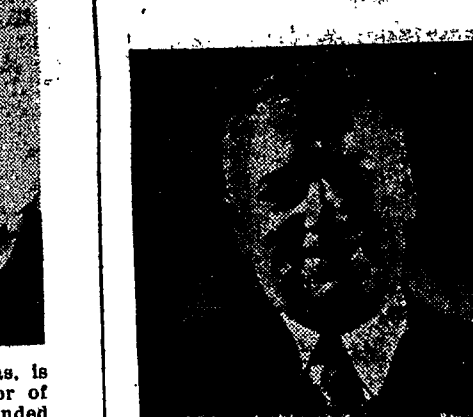

Crymes Pittman, Jackson district sales manager for United Gas, is shown presenting a Company check to pretty Neva Jean Taylor of Laurel to cover the expenses of the 32 boys and girls who attended the South Mississippi 4-H Club Junior Leaders Training Conference at Wesson. Looking on is R. O. Monosmith, State 4-H Club Leader, and assisting the Extension Service staff in conducting conference activities.

Americans generally and Mississippians specifically would feel a little better about the future of the nation if they had had an opportunity to see 4-H Club boys and girls at work during the recent Junior Leaders training conferences at Wesson and Oxford.

Each hour of the three-day stay was carefully planned and programmed by State 4-H Club Leader R. O. Monosmith and his staff, which included C. M. Chafee, M. A. Rowzee, Miss Blanche Goad, Miss Ingrid Therese and Duane Rosen. More than a hundred county agents, assistant county agents and adult leaders attended the two conferences, picking up ideas for their county 4-H Club leadership programs for next year and assisting the Extension Service staff in conducting conference activities.

Trifles & Treasures

BY PEGGY FOOTER

Ezio Pinza, one of our favorite professional men, has completed his new home near Stamford, Conn. It is said that when one pushes the door-button that peals of "Some Enchanted Evening" ring forth to greet the guest.

The home, a $60,000 mansion, is a blend of Colonial and modern designs. It contains every electronic device that Pinza could buy or invent, and is said to be run almost like magic. Buttons are in every room which may bring super service at a touch. Radios and television sets in every room are hidden from sight but are brought easily into view by the push of a button.

Reminds us of the time when a relative brought home a de luxe convertible which operated much the same as the Pinza home. There was a button for this and a button for that. Attempting to drive the unusual thing we became confused with so many buttons—windows began to go up, some to go down, the windshield wipers began a steady tattoo and finally in desperation we got out declaring vociferously that the thing was haunted. We can still hear Billy, the young son of the owner, laughing heartily at our remark and thorough disgust at not being able to cope with so many buttons.

Listening to Norman Treigle at a recent Pops concert we did not agree with some friends that he was in top form. During intermission when we questioned the bass-baritone about this he said with some annoyance that the electrician at the mike-controls was attempting to keep his voice down. What a pity, for Norman's genius is in the volume of his voice. It was his local "swan song" for he left Monday to study in New York. A young woman at an adjoining table was heard to say, "He has no poise or stage presence." Which dispels any idea that he is conceited. Treigle knows that he lacks stage presence and poise and that is one reason he has taken off for New York, to acquire what he needs along that line. But, the very lack of those qualities gives him a sort of "little boy" air which have gotten the "big head" while we chatted with him at least a half dozen people waited to speak to him. Amongst waited was one of Norman's former school teachers who had taught him in grammar school. Another was a young woman who entreated him to sing "Wonder Bar" which she had heard him do at the Blue Room on a previous occasion.

Lorraine, Treigle's wife, and their small son will remain in N. O. for the present until Norman gets established and then they will join him. Much credit is due Lorraine for her broadmindedness and good-fellowship in helping Norman along on an inevitable road to success.

We could not leave the subject of the concert without mentioning Barbara Gibson, who hits "D." I had never heard any artist reach a higher note than "C" but she did the feat magnificently. She has one of the most superb voices we have heard in a long time. Only one thing dimmed the brilliance of her performance and that was a sense of affection that was slightly disconcerting, otherwise the girl is a find.

Listen, girls! Secluded in a place in Western Indo-China, a Viennese woman called Clivia Ratkin has a harem of 46 men! She reversed the usual set-up in Asian households ten years ago when an inheritance from an uncle gave her a fortune.

Because there is no local law prohibiting polyandry, French colonial administrations tolerate Clivia's harem. Her husbands are mostly Cambodians and Siamese, with not a European among them.

It is said that when she snaps her fingers, the 46 men jump to do her bidding. Not only are they devoted to Clivia, but they are also jealous of the privilege of being her husbands. Strangers trying to enter the secluded palace are likely to be kicked and get a severe beating from the various husbands, who resent any addition to the harem.

The multiple husbands serenade their wife each morning as a sort of a musical alarm clock which she turns off with a handclap. Helping her dress, the husbands also accompany her on a pre-breakfast walk about the palace grounds. On the way back they take turns, in groups of two, carrying their wife on their shoulders.

Promising to visit her, King Phumiphon of Cambodia offered his congratulations to Clivia for governing so many men without an insurrection.

How boring it must be to have so many husbands under foot. Clivia must be a super-egotist to want 92 eyes ogling her at every turn. We were avidly curious as to whether she possesses any special talents, and when we asked her, she said she had no special talents, but she was a very good typewriter operator.

We learn that the typewriter, born of many minds, was a thoroughly safe invention. And when it was first born in 1872, the story goes, it was a Kentucky housewife named Clara who first typewritten letter to her son who wrote it with the accompanying note: "You don't need to write up no letter to me, I kin feel write."

In the Kuruh tribe of India a girl is married to the first man upon whom she accepts a cigarette. And in the Hurum tribe in Africa male members can get a wife only by trading one work horse for her.

Like apricot flavor? Apricot mold is good and very refreshing.
1/2 cup strained orange juice.
1 envelope unflavored gelatin
1 12-ounce can (1 1/2 cups) apricot nectar
1 Tablespoon lemon juice
Whipped sweetened evaporated milk or cream.

Measure the orange juice in a cup; sprinkle the gelatin over it to soften. In a saucepan, heat the apricot nectar until thoroughly dissolved. Stir in the lemon juice.

Pour into four one-half cup size molds; chill until set. Unmould and top with the whipped cream. The recipe makes four servings.

Another good apricot dessert is Apricot Ice made this way:

1/2 cup water
3/4 cup light corn syrup
3/4 cup sugar
3/4 cup lemon juice
2 12-ounce cans (3 cups) apricot nectar

2 egg whites.
Combine the water, corn syrup and sugar in a saucepan. Bring to boil over medium heat, stirring until the sugar dissolves. Boil five minutes. Cool. Add the lemon juice and apricot nectar.

Pour into a refrigerator freezing tray and freeze—with control set for softest setting. When frozen, remove and beat with a beating spoon. Pour into the molds and freeze until firm. Turn mixture into the freezing tray and continue freezing until firm (one to three hours). Set the control dialway between fast freezing and softest setting.

And here is a recipe for mayonnaise that is called "Magic Mayonnaise."
1 cup (1/2 can) sweetened condensed milk
1 egg yolk
1/2 cup vinegar or lemon juice
1/2 salad oil or melted butter
1 egg yolk
1/2 teaspoon salt
Dash of pepper
1 tea. dry mustard

Place the ingredients in a glass jar, cover tightly and shake vigorously for two minutes. If desired, the ingredients may be placed in a mixing bowl and beaten with a rotary beater until the mixture thickens. If a thicker consistency is desired, chill the dressing for about one hour before serving.

And with the advent of Independence Day facing us one hopes again that someday the law which prohibits fireworks will be enforced.

By the grapevine system comes news from Winnie Heath, who is having a wonderful visit in California. The news tells that she had lunch with Gwen Bristow, the writer, who discussed her sequel to "Jubilee Trail" which Gwen is preparing for the publishers.

Best wishes to Mrs. M. M. Johnson, and we hope to be seeing her about soon.

Of course, there is no justification for murder, but we were quite elated when we read of the release of a young mother on a murder charge. But, since there is no justification for murder neither should there be for the brutal beating of a woman. Beating a woman, in our estimation, should

WATER FOR RICE CULTURE

Water in the form of rain, or from any agricultural source, is essential to the rice grower in Mississippi, in addition to the water needed for the rice to become a growing plant. The rice grower is becoming apprehensive as to the supply of water for rice culture in the state. Some of the rice growers in the state foresee the possibility of a shortage, provided an agreement is made with the State Geological Survey to the problem, and are endeavoring to secure such a study. The State Geological Survey is of the opinion that the long term supply of water for rice culture will have to come from some other source. The Mississippi River, which flows into the Gulf of Mexico, carries an average of 100 billion gallons of water into the Gulf every year.
